Family members of the 24-year-old Dover man who was found dead in the state's newest prison infirmary last week are demanding answers about the death, and getting nothing but silence from the Department of Correction.

Demetrius Caldwell had been undergoing unspecified treatment for a month in the infirmary at the Delaware Correctional Center near Smyrna before he was found dead, laying on a mattress on the floor of his cell Jan. 10.

A medical staffer had checked on him 25 minutes before he was found.

The Department of Correction has released Caldwell's body to his family, who plan to bury him Saturday, but it has not told them what caused the young man's death.

"It's mind-blowing. They won't even tell us why he died," said uncle Lionel Dixon. "He was a healthy young man who was getting ready to get out. They had him in the infirmary for a month, and they don't know how he died? They know. They're just not saying."

Meningitis ruled out

Dixon viewed his nephew's body at the funeral home, and was shocked by what he saw.

"They cut his head and chest all open, and they don't tell us how he died? That's brutal, man. That's cruel and brutal," he said. "They're not saying anything, and they're hoping we don't either."

Calls to Correction Commissioner Stanley W. Taylor Jr. and Chief Medical Examiner Dr. Richard T. Callery were not returned Tuesday.

Prison officials ruled out meningococcal meningitis as the cause of death late last week, after naming it as a possibility. They've said doctors from the prison's medical provider, St. Louis-based Correctional Medical Services; the Department of Correction; the Division of Public Health, and the medical examiner's office are still trying to determine a cause of death.

Word of disturbing behavior

All of Caldwell's family described him as a healthy young man with no known medical issues. Caldwell had been an inmate since Nov. 6 for violating his probation on a 2005 drug charge, to which he pleaded guilty. Nearly half of his incarceration was spent in the infirmary.

Uncle Joe Caldwell said he was contacted a week before his nephew's death by a prison staffer he has known for years.

24-year-old inmate's death and treatment astound his family

No word on what killed 'healthy boy'

By LEE WILLIAMS
The News Journal

Demetrius Caldwell was found dead in his prison cell after he spent a month in the infirmary.

"He said my nephew was spitting at female guards and cussing male guards in the infirmary," Joe Caldwell said. "He told me they were tired of him, and that they can hurt him."

Joe Caldwell said his nephew was not allowed visitors, phone calls or even clothes.

"His dad, my brother, is blaming himself because of that warning," Joe Caldwell said. "He feels there's more he could have done."

'Never notified us'

Demetrius' sister, Dominique Caldwell, said she'd been told her brother was taken to the infirmary for a psychiatric evaluation.

"But he was only seen by one psychiatrist, one time, in a month - one time in 30 days," she said. "They never notified us he was even ill."

Dominique Caldwell said the family had scheduled numerous visits, but all of them were canceled by prison officials at the last minute.

"We drove out there to see him several times, but were told we couldn't see him," she said. "People called us and said we needed to check on him. He was a healthy boy when he went into prison."

The family knew Demetrius as "Dumpy."

"He was always fond of his grandma's homemade dumpplings," said aunt Juliette Caldwell. "Of all the people in our family, he was so sweet. He has a good, loving family. His parents have been together for years, and his sister cares about him."

Dominique Caldwell said her brother enjoyed video games, nice sneakers and drawing.

"I miss him already," she said. "A 24-year-old man shouldn't have died in a manner of minutes."

Health care under review

Last month, the U.S. Justice Department found "substantial civil rights violations" in four Delaware prisons.

The federal investigation was prompted by a series of articles in The News Journal that revealed inadequate health care and questionable treatment within the prisons.

The state signed an 87-point settlement with the Justice Department, ending the investigation.
